PRAYER.

This is the prayer of his people. Let the Dreadful Hand prevail. That his Day's work be not ended. That his heavy Light do not fall. From the stern grey Northern sky. From under the Drovers. The prayer of the men who have him Wings up to the quiet stars.

This is the prayer of the English Who sail on the Seven Seas. For they hear his salt-sea music In the great Deep's litanies. That the life of the stricken Singer May rise as the slow sands fall. Till his psalm of triumph echoes Orim Death's Recessional.

THANKSGIVING.

Hear now the hymn of the waters, The psalm of the Seven Seas; Joy of the surge that waileth his dirge When the Slinger awayed on the horrid surge.

And fought with Death on his knees. Back from the gloom and the silence He comes to the joyous sun. Back from the night, and clasping the Light That could not fail in the whole world's night.

With the Day's Work still undone. Mark to the hymn of the waters— The sound that the great deeps call. As dark waves break and the spindrift flake Is tossed by the salt-sea wind, they make Bead's Death's Recessional!
